Operators Seek Tide Oil Leases In Halfmoon Bay

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 26.—(UP)—

California's "Save the Beaches" act has already resulted in saving large areas of beach lands from being spoiled by prospecting operations, A.

R. Heron, director of finance, reported here today.

"From San Mateo county, at Halfmoon Bay, 24 applications have been received for permits to prospect on tide lands, of which six were granted in November.

"In the Elwood field, agreements have been made among the various companies operating on both the uplands and the tide lands to curtail oil production. A well when brought in is customarily allowed to flow for about 14 days, after which the flow is reduced until it produces about 70 per cent of the natural flow. This action has been taken voluntarily by the operators in compliance with the national and state policy of conservation of oil and gas."

Mrs. Harry Gee

Funeral Today

Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock this morning for Mrs.

Harry Gee of San Carlos, who passed away at a San Francisco hospital, following an operation Monday night.

Mrs. Gee was the wife of Harry Gee, well-known brick contractor of San Carlos. In addition to her husband she leaves two daughters, Elsie and Nellie Gee. She was an active worker in club and church organizations. Mrs. Gee was a native of Stockport, England. She and her family had been residents of San Carlos for the past eight years.

Services Today

For Otto Koch

Funeral services will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock at the chapel of Layne & Tinney in this city, for Otto Koch, well-known former resident of San Carlos. Services will be conducted by Rev. J. E. Marozik, paster of the Redeemer Lutheran church. Interment will follow in Cypress Lawn cemetery.

Otto Koch was a native of Germany, and 54 years of age. He had been a resident of San Carlos for seven years, but for the past eight months had been living on Gordon street in this city. In a fit of despondency due to ill health, he ended his life a few days ago by slashing his throat with a razor.

He leaves a widow, Mrs. Selma Koch, a daughter, Mrs. Meta Swart, and a sister, Mrs. Ida Bush.

The Booster Committee of Bay

View Lodge No. 109, I. O. O. F., is planning a dance in the Odd Fel-

Dr. and Mrs. A. E. O'Neill will leave tomorrow for Eureka to spend the New Year's holidays with Dr.

O'Neill's parents.

On Monday a shy young couple entered the front door of the county jail; and bashfully approaching Deputy Tim O'Rourke, who was on duty at the desk,

the young man asked if they were in the proper place to get married.

O'Rourke informed them that marrying was the function of the judge and sent them to Judge life sentence.

Heart Trouble Is

Fatal to Hunter

Joseph Escobar, 40, San Francisco service station operator, died suddenly on Sunday, while hunting along Butano creek, near Pescadero.

Three companions saw the hunter collapse as they were walking along the creek in search of quail. Death is believed to have been due to a heart attack. An inquest will be held today by Dr. J. C. McGovern, coroner.

Word received here this week by Miss Clara Shelley from relatives of Edwin Pitcher, former well-known

Redwood City young man, tell of the critical illness of the latter at his home in Washington. Mr. Pitcher served in the World War, having enlisted when he was 18 years old and his present condition is believed to be due to complications which set in from being gassed while fighting on the French front. Mr. Pitcher spent a year at the Sequoia Union

High School. He is the son of Mrs.

Elizabeth Pitcher.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Walker and little daughter were here from Cor-

Stanford University, five miles football circles at the present time with three of the greatest gridiron aggregations in the United States practicing daily in the big stadium.

The three teams are Stanford, the Army from West Point, who clash in their inter-sectional meet in the the team representing the East in the annual East-West contest in has a few men on its squad who have made a name for themselves on the gridiron this year. So down on the "Farm" there is much activ-

A snowplow, which enables mail planes to land on either ground or snow, is expected to materially expedite movement of Boeing mail-passenger planes on the Chicago-Oakland-San Francisco route, according to company representatives. Tests are being made with the attachments on mail planes over the mountain division. It is said that this is the first time a ski has been developed strong enough to be of service to a plane as large as the Boeing tri-motored transport, where the landing gear is designed to bear a landing impact of forty-three tons. A small ski is also attached to the tail skid. The Boeing snowplow, of duralumin and steel, is light and strong and offers little resistance to a pontoon in appearance with runners affected by deep corrugation. The landing wheel projects through a center slot.

Butte County will not buy another county hospital. This was made certain when Dr. N. T. Enloe of Chico withdrew his offer to the county to sell his Paradise sanitarium for $25,000. Taxpayers objected to the supervisors' plan to buy the hospital, alleging the cost of maintaining two separate institutions would be too great. Referendum petitions were circulated against the purchase.

More than 3000 deer roan in the Mt. Tamalpais game refuge, according to Walter B. Sellmer, county game warden. He added that more than 400 deer are killed in nearby hunting grounds each year and that Marin County ranks second in the greatest number of deer killed per square mile in California.

Day and night guards were being maintained at Sacramento Valley schools following three school fires, believed to be of incendiary origin. The Hammond School in Yuba County was burned at a loss of $15,000. The fire is believed to have been started by an arsonist. The Biggs grammar school and the Fairfield High School were the other institutions destroyed by fire.

The Port Bragg Chamber of Commerce executive board and officials began promoting a Mendocino Coast chamber of commerce, taking in all the towns along the Mendocino coast from Rockport, on the north, to Point Arena, on the south. This includes Rockport, Westport, Fort Bragg, Mendocino, Little River, Albion, Greenwood, Manchester and Point Arena. The advent of the coming Shoreline highway and other projects, such as commercial fishing and land development along the coast, is the need for such an organization.

Negroes, Japanese and Mexicans in California are increasing more rapidly than the population in general, according to a booklet of statistics just compiled by Associate Professor Paul S. Taylor of the University of California department of economics. Summarizing the statistics, Professor Taylor states: The number of negroes in California rose from 11,045 in 1900, to 21,845 in 1910, and to 38,763 in 1920. The number of Japanese rose from 10,151 to 41,356, to 71,952 in the same period. The population of the state advanced from 1,485,053 in 1900, to 2,377,549 in 1910, and to 3,426,861 in 1920.

Slot machine operators of Humboldt County have been given a sharp warning by Sheriff John W. Ruerner. Last year the county supervisors passed an ordinance banning slot machines. Recently Ruerner received reports that several machines are being operated. He has ordered his officers to seize the machines and arrest the operators.

Petitions asking for the incorporation of Fairfax and surrounding territory were presented to the Marin County Board of Supervisors at San Rafael. Territory included in the incorporation plans includes the Pastor, Fairfax, Manor and Cascade districts.

The San Diego Electric Railway Company was authorized by the State Railroad Commission to acquire the operating rights of the F. A. Sutherland auto stage service between San Diego and Encanto, and between San Diego and National City and Chula Vista.

Water is now being supplied for the University of Santa Clara by its own well on the university farm. The final link in the college water system was completed recently. The city of Santa Clara has for many years supplied the university with water.

Funds voted three years ago for a new city hall but held inadequate for a suitable structure, are to be used for the first unit of such a building, according to action taken by the Hayward city council. The money amounts to $45,000, voted in a bond issue. Subsequent issues to increase this amount have failed.

By a margin of twenty-four votes Pacific Grove citizens defeated a proposed $65,000 bond issue to buy the beach and bathhouse property. With a two-thirds majority needed to carry the measure, 497 votes favored the bond issue and 284 opposed it.

Monterey has become a port of call for intercoastal freighters. The Redwood Line ships now take on and discharge freight there.

Hope McFall Post No. 249, American Legion, at Manteca, has voted to accept the offer of Mrs. W. M. Mike-sell for a building site for its memorial hall. Plans are being made to erect the building.

Merger of five Fresno laundries and two local towel supply houses into a single organization, which also proposes to consolidate and acquire laundries in Stockton, Sacramento and San Jose, is being negotiated by Smith & Johnson, Oakland brokers, who have effected similar mergers in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and elsewhere.

A group of Coalinga citizens appeared before the county Board of Supervisors at Fresno requesting that Fresno County make some provision for properly caring for indigent sick of the Coalinga district. The request followed discussion of Coalinga service clubs, who uncovered numerous cases of lack of facilities, one case resulting in the death of an indigent. The Coalinga delegation was composed of Mayor W. C. Wallace, City Attorney Fred E. Butler and President J. Zwang of the Coalinga Chamber of Commerce.

The State Department of Public Works opened bids on a grading project in San Bernardino County and announced the Lewis Construction Company of Los Angeles to be low with a figure of $139,687. Marvelous Marin Inc. set out on a new year with the most ambitious program of its history. On the program are "wider publicity for Marin County," "co-operation with Golden Gate Bridge directors" and "increased efforts to win the army air base for Marin Meadows." At the annual meeting recently Harry G. Ridgway, president, was re-elected after reading a report detailing the organization's accomplishments during the year.

Traffic officers of the state highway patrol are to wage campaigns against some phase of improper driving during each month of 1939. Gene W. Blaculus, superintendent of the patrol, announced. At the beginning of each month in the new year traffic officers will be instructed to watch in particular some one phase of motor vehicle operation, warn drivers against violations of the state law up to about the middle of the month, then hand out citations after that.

Establishment of a municipal hospital at Pittsburg through a city bond issue is urged in a resolution passed by the Pittsburg Association, Legion Post, who is to sponsor the campaign. The lack of a hospital in Pittsburg, a great industrial center, has resulted in endangering the lives of accident victims by rushing them to the County Hospital, twenty miles distant, it was pointed out. The resolution asks that the bond issue be placed on the May election ballot.

Plans for a huge expansion of the iron and steel industry of California, including new plants, enlargements of existing establishments and increased payrolls, were being worked out by leaders of the industry. The movement was launched at a meeting of the executive committee of the iron and steel group of the State Chamber of Commerce, southern section. The meeting was preliminary to a state conference of both north and south at Del Monte February 13-15, and was held to formulate a program for that gathering.

Mokelumne water now being served throughout nine East Bay cities is softer and has a lower percentage of chlorine and alkalinity than the average city water services. This is pointed out in a report issued by Dr. George C. Pardee, president of the East Bay Municipal Utility District, following recent tests. Pardee states tests proved that since the Mokelumne water was turned into local mains the water has improved. Average city water contains fifty parts to the million parts of chlorine while the quantity of chlorine in local water is only nine parts, according to Pardee. At the same time Mokelumne water is only about one-sixth as hard as other local water.

Permission has been granted by the Railroad Commission to the Southern Pacific Company to abandon its non-agency station of Whittier Tank, on the Lakeview branch of its Shasta division, in Modoc County, and also to abandon its non-agency station of Ramona, on the Lakeview branch, in Modoc County.

Sweeping attack on "economic fallacies" in the new bank and corporation income tax law had been delivered by Dixwell Pierce, secretary of the State Board of Equalization, in an address before the Sacramento Exchange Club recently. Instead of averting a loss in bank taxes, the new law has reduced the contribution of banks toward the support of the state government from $4,706,000 last year to $435,000 this year, Pierce declared. "Imagine the result if all other taxes were reduced to less than one-tenth of what has been required—how would the cost of government be met?" he asked.

Bert B. Meek, State director of public works, awarded a $5,570 contract to LaTourette Fiscal Co. of Sacramento for complete mechanical work on two new barracks at the Yountville State Veterans' Home.

Next spring, if all goes well, little black bears will wave gay greetings to hikers on the bosky trails of famous Mt. Tamalpais. W. B. Sellmer, Marin county game warden said that he believes he has finally secured a number of these harmless, frolicsome, lunch pilfering specimens of the Ursidae, without which no hikers' paradise is really complete.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

BRIDGE-GRAFTING ON GIRDLED TREE

Important to Keep Cion Wood Dormant by Burying.

The one way to save girdled trees is by bridge-grafting, says Prof. G. W. Peck of Cornell University.

Bridge-grafting is done with cion wood, cut from a hardy tree such as McIntosh or Northern spy. One-year-old sprouts are best, and if these are not obtainable, water sprouts may be used. Professor Peck says that even those trees which are only slightly girdled should be bridge-grafted. The age of the tree apparently in no way affects the success of the operation, since trees thirty years old, or older, have been saved by grafting.

It is important to keep the cion wood dormant; this may be done by burying the shoots in well-drained sandy soil. The most favorable time for bridge-grafting is in the spring when the buds are swelling.

"One of the most serious mistakes made by the amateur," said Professor Peck, "is the use of too few cions. As many as possible should be used, placed at distances from one and one-half to two inches apart. I have known as many as twenty-three cions to be bridge-grafted on one tree."

Probably the most effective way to prevent girdling by rodents is to place many poisoned baits about the trees. These must be placed in closed traps so that birds cannot get at them. Another method is to sink a cylinder of galvanized wire mesh around the trees, but this is not wholly dependable. If the roots are too badly girdled, it is wiser to let the tree go, than to attempt to save it with doubtful success, and at great expense.

Pruning Apple Orchard Rather Difficult Job

In pruning old apple orchard, try to avoid cutting off any large branches. Large pruning wounds heal over very slowly and often allow decay to enter the heart of the tree. Cutting off large branches will create "holes" in the bearing surface. Such holes often mean seriously reduced yields, unsound branches, and a jungle of water-sprouts. Our advice would be that you cut off all dead wood and then thin out the smaller branches in such a way that each branch will have its own small quota of room and sunlight. The tree should not be too thick and neither should it be too open. By thinning out the smaller branches, you will make a fine-mesh sieve of your tree, through which the sunlight can filter. The top of the tree should receive the most attention because a thick top will act as an umbrella which will keep the sunlight out of the rest of the tree. Do not leave any stubs, but make all cuts close to the parent branch. Our final advice is that you do not prune too much. Do not cut off a branch unless you know why you are doing so, and when in doubt as to whether a branch should come off or not give it the benefit of the doubt and leave it on the tree.

Strawberry Beds Should Be Mulched When Frozen

Strawberry beds should not be mulched until the ground has frozen at least two inches deep. If the mulch is applied before this time, the subsoil will not have been cooled sufficiently to stop root growth, and after the mulch has been applied and snow falls upon it, this warmth in the subsoil will come up and warm the soil around the roots and start growth. Then when severe winter sets in, the ill effects will be much worse than if the mulch had never been applied at all.

Horticultural Facts

Small trees must be protected from injury by jack rabbits.

Cut a poor tree when it is young to permit a good one to replace it.

Keep poor apples off the market because they will spoil prices in spite of the short crop and increased demand.

Care of the spray machine equipment includes thoroughly cleaning the hose line, nozzle and cut-off and storing in a dry place.

Mark the weak trees in the orchard so that you will know next spring which ones should have a generous supply of a nitrogen fertilizer.

Assist stored apples to breathe correctly by furnishing plenty of air. Proper ventilation will aid in keeping the fruit longer in storage. If the humidity is not right, the floors should be sprinkled.

If the soil is in condition to work without injury to its texture, the last of February and the first week of March is the best time to plant orchard trees. The latest safe date is April 1. Sour cherry trees are not of much value if set that late unless they have been in first-class storage.

Growers are urged by entomologists and plant pathologists to take good care of spraying equipment. Such care includes cleaning and oiling all working parts, checking to find worn or broken parts so they can be replaced, and housing the sprayer.

Fall planting of orchard nursery stock is usually not as advisable as spring planting. Nurseries generally have a better selection of trees for sale in the fall than in the spring. It is advisable to place an order in the fall for spring delivery.

GOOD THINGS

The following is not an expensive cake, but it is rich, delicious and excellent for keeping.

Tennessee Fruit Cake.—Chop one-half pound of currants, one pound of raisins, one pound of dates, one-half pound each of candied pineapple, cherries, almonds and pecans, one-fourth pound of sliced citron, the same of orange and lemon peel. Six eggs, beaten well, add one cupful of sugar after creaming it with one cupful of butter, three cupfuls of flour, one and one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of nutmeg and allspice, one-half teaspoonful of soda and one-half cupful of grape juice, one-half cupful of honey or molasses and one square of chocolate if desired. Mix as usual. This makes seven pounds of cake.

Egless, Butterless, Milkless Cake.—Place two cupfuls of brown sugar, two cupfuls of coffee, one-fourth cupful of sweet fat, and one cupful of seedless raisins in a saucepan, cook over slow heat until the sugar is dissolved. Boil gently for five minutes. Cool. Sift three cupfuls of flour with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful of mace, add to this one teaspoonful of salt. Add one-fourth pound of sliced citron and the same of orange peel, mixing the fruit through the dry ingredients. Bake in a paper lined pan, one and one-half hours. This makes a large loaf cake weighing two and one-half pounds. It will not keep indefinitely but may be kept for several weeks.

Place a hard apple in the cake box and renew it when it becomes dry or soft. This will flavor and keep the cakes moist.

Baked Apples and Onions.—Slice six onions and three medium-sized apples, place in layers in a buttered baking dish. Season each layer with salt, pepper and a tablespoonful of sugar for each layer. Add one-fourth cupful of water and bake until the onions are tender. Serve with roast of pork.

Sou Foam Frosting.—Take one-half cupful of light brown sugar, one cupful of granulated sugar, one-fourth cupful of water, two tablespoonfuls of white coffee, one-fourth teaspoonful of cream of tartar, the whites of two eggs and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Boil the sugar, water, coffee and cream of tartar without stirring, until the sirup spins a long thread. Pour slowly over the beaten egg whites, beating until thick enough to hold its shape; add salt, whip again and spread on the cake.

Economical Foods.
A good loaf of bread prepared at home has twice the nourishment that bakery food has and is much more appetizing.

Graham Bread.—Take one cupful of sugar, two and one-half cupfuls of graham flour, one-half cupful of flour, one-half cupful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of raisins and one cupful each of sweet and sour milk. A pint of buttermilk may be used in place of sour and sweet milk.

Grapenut Bread—Two Loaves.—Sift four cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful each of salt and soda and one cupful of sugar. Beat one egg, add the dry ingredients with one cupful each of sour and sweet milk, stir in one cupful of grape nuts and bake in two single loaf bread pans.

Tapoca With Apples.—Take one-third of a cupful of minute tapioca, add one cupful of boiling canned fruit juice or water and cook with a little salt until clear. Butter a baking dish and pour in the tapioca, cover the top with quartered apples, sprinkle with sugar and dot with bits of butter; bake until the apple is tender. Serve with whipped cream.

Indian Pudding With Apples.—Scald two quarts of milk and stir in one cupful of corn meal; cook until the mixture thickens. Remove from the heat, add one cupful of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful each of nutmeg and cinnamon and two cupfuls of quartered sweet apples. Add one cupful of finely chopped suet and dust the top of the pudding with flour. Stir occasionally at first and bake for two hours, then add another pint of cold milk. Continue baking until a nice brown crust is formed over the top. Serve hot. This pudding needs no sauce.

Orange Pie.—Fill a baked shell with thinly sliced oranges, sprinkle with sugar and cover with a meringue. Brown in a hot oven and serve cold. Never eat a hearty meal when physically exhausted or mentally disturbed.

"Punchon" and "Slab"

A punchon is a split log or heavy slab with the face smoothed. A slab is the outside piece, with or without the bark, taken from a log. In the days when floors were made of punchons, in some localities only inside pieces were designated with this name.

Trapping Spirit of Disease
In China when a child becomes ill, a doll is hung before the door of the house. The disease spirit is supposed to enter the doll, which in turn is taken down and burned.

MIDWINTER AFTERNOON CHAPEAUX; CHIC BLOUSE OF METAL WEAVE

MIDWINTER MILLINERY

That which is called "atmosphere" may be rightfully applied to the little afternoon hats which milliners are creating for the midwinter season. Be they ever so simple, perhaps merely draped or shirred without a vestige of trimming, through the subtle art of their designers, dressiness and formality (in the sense of contrasting sports and utilitarian types) is indelibly written all over them.

Of course, the fact that velvet and metal laces enter so largely into their make-up has a lot to do with the conviction these snug-fitting little hats carry in regard to their "dressup" intentions. The three petite afternoon chapeaux in the picture carry the point in discussion most admirably. Not with standing their simplicity, there is that about them which immediately tunes to thoughts of five o'clock tea, matinee programs, bridge parties and such happy occasions of the afternoon social hour.

The hat at the top is considerably shirred at each side of its crown and in connection with the long side drapes. The ornament is composed of glittering rhinestones set in a silver mounting.

Below it is a very youthful model inspired by the hair ribbon styles of little girls as were in an age when long tresses had to be "tied back." This turban is of mauve velvet trimmed with a bow of self velvet. When it comes to velvet, milliners are making a pretty play on color. This is largely due to the fact that costume or ensemble hats are the call "fans," or who attends bridge parties teas or makes formal calls.

By way of achieving that coveted dress-up appearance of those who keep social engagements, there is nothing that arrives at the goal so definitely as black velvet for the skirt with a cloth of metallics for the blouse. Seeing that the social season is now on in full swing, the present formal daytime picture is largely a matter of just such resplendent combinations.

As to whether the silver or the gold note be accented, is left to the preference of the wearer. That silver-with-black is so closely contesting the gold-with-black effects is no doubt due to the vogue for anything which approaches the black-and-white theme which is at the present moment so outstanding in the winter mode. For the blouse illustrated below, the designer chooses the lovely silver metal cloth striped in dark and light tones.

One of the notable characteristics of many of the newer metallic materials, is their sheerness. Not that the heavier weaves are ignored for both play a prominent part in the mode. In fact some of the smartest metallics take on almost a lace-like appearance. Printed gold and silver cloth of the hour. To wear with the velvet frock in a rich forest green, the modiste creates a hat in like color, or if the gown be in one of the smart dahlia shades or perhaps a glowing wine red, it's modish for the hat to repeat the same coloring.

The effort to bring back trimming to the millinery world is reflected in the model to the left, which is of black velvet with silver lace of very desirable patterning. And the flirtatious eyebrow veil, it is conspicuous in the midwinter millinery picture.

The Metallic Blouse.
Among the wardrobe items which this age of luxury demands, the blouse of gold or silver cloth stands high in the list. In fact, a resplendent metallic blouse has come to be regarded as a necessary luxury for the woman who registers among matinee is the dernier cri of the formal fabric mode. It is used for evening wraps, for the frock entire, as well as for the afternoon blouse.

To those who prefer to merely suggest the metallic note, the new moirés shot with gold or silver are making very special appeal. Then there are the handsome satin brocades which also include a patterning of gold and silver interweavings. Net embroidered with gold or silver dots is very charming for the blouse.

Milliners as well as dressmakers are subscribing to the metal vogue, which results in very charming ensembles made up of blouse and chapeau fashioned of handsome metallic weaves, the same to be worn with velvet jacket and skirt suits.

Bloused Jacket

Practical and becoming for cold days is the bloused jacket suit that can be worn easily under the fur coat. One of these is made of brown tannin suit fabric, with the coat snugly fitted to the hips and bloused all around above. A sleeveless cape au lait satin blouse accompanies it, with man's shirt collar and bow tie of same.

New Fur Suits
Fur suits promise to be extremely popular this season and, what is more important, continue to be what is known as a "high fashion." In other words they will be worn by those really chic women who set the fashions for the smart world.

Novel Umbrella Styles

Colors for umbrellas remain the same and the crooked handles are more fashionable than ever. Some houses are showing the short stubby handles to fit into the overnight bag, while the collapsible handle is also used for traveling.

Publicity is to a town what baking-powder is to a biscuit.

Publicity raised old King Tut out of the obscurity of an Egyptian tomb and made his name a modern household word.

Publicity has taken obscure individuals and raised them to fame and fortune.

Publicity is the potent factor that has brought individuals, events and places into national prominence.

And since publicity is of such importance in the scheme of things it can do much for us collectively as a city. Therefore it behooves us to know something about it, and how to use it for our advantage.

There are two kinds of community publicity:

INTERNAL PUBLICITY:—Designed to tell the people who live in the community and surrounding trade territory of the advantages of our town and to establish a closer bond of confidence and coöperation.

EXTERNAL PUBLICITY:—Designed to tell the people outside of our "Greater Community" of the advantages and opportunities of living and doing business here.

The newspaper is, of course, our most convenient and logical medium for both INTERNAL publicity and EXTERNAL publicity. This is true in every community.

Second only to the newspaper, is "word of mouth" publicity. It has been said that if each person in a town successfully strove to bring one new family into the town, or create employment for one other person, population, prosperity and business could be doubled within a year's time.

If we are proud of our town (and we are) let's give our town PUBLICITY! The kind of INTERNAL publicity that makes us glad it's OUR town, and the kind of EXTERNAL publicity that makes the rest of the world wish it were theirs!

Folks, let's "broadcast" to the world the good points of our town, and "tell 'em" why we are proud to live in

LIVING IN KITCHENS AND CASTLES

(By D. J. Walsh.)

JEAN'S blue eyes shone as she opened the book of samples. "Look, Donald, isn't this fabric lovely? I do want to fix up the kitchen and have it look like something. Everything is old and drab."

Her husband shot a hungry glance toward the table. "I had a hard day at the office," he said, unconscious that he uttered a marital bromide, "and I want my dinner. Put that stuff away."

The young face clouded and, had Donald cared to look, he'd have seen that her mouth drooped like that of a scolded child. After all, at nineteen a girl is scarcely more than that and Jean had never had the bride's joy of a new home. She had married Donald for love and the necessities for the wife who does her own work would, she had vaguely supposed, naturally follow the honeymoon. Poor Jean had never done anything more strenuous than ride horseback and dance and she soon discovered that her husband had no intention of replacing the worn furnishings of his mother's house with a bride. "My mother selected everything here herself and surely, Jean, you should be satisfied. I'm afraid you'll never be the housekeeper that she was," he sometimes ended.

The shabbiness was bad enough. The stir of her attainments unendurable, or so she felt. Donald was perfectly able to furnish the suburban cottage if he chose. He did not, however, choose to humor what he said frankly was an extravagant whim. "Show me that you can keep house with what you have—then talk about this queer color scheme you rave about. I never heard mother speak of having a turquoise blue dishpan or a blue double boiler. Oatmeal tastes good no matter whether it's put in a blue pan or one of pink. Fads it is, not sense."

The question of dainty brightness became an obsession with Jean and she adapted her work shamelessly. The old sink grew accustomed to a load of soiled dishes and the tin dishpan grew more and more battered from Jean's reckless handling. The question of acquiring of some yards of turquoise fabric to cover the scuffed table and cupboard brought the family far to a climax. The material was surprisingly inexpensive. Jean held her sample against the dubious wood of the corner cupboard and, closing her long-lashed blue eyes, dreamed of a gay kitchen to match the bit of blue.

"Uncle Jim wrote that he'd take me on his trip to Scotland if you could spare me. He'll come back on the return trip of the Empress. And," Jean cried recklessly as she saw the familiar negative shake of her uncle's head opposite, "I'm going. Give up, do you hear? Why should I stay here and spoil my hands when I could be seeing Edinburgh castle again? I love to look at it by moonlight. Uncle Jim and I are kindred spirits. He loves poetry and ocean trips and things like I do."

Donald cast a grim look down at his plate. His mouth was set in a stubborn line that matched the pink, primmed lip of Jean. Once Jean's mouth had seemed made for laughter, but the misunderstandings and the bleak atmosphere of the faded old home had changed her. She felt as though Donald's mother still lived, in spirit, in that house and that that model housekeeper thoroughly disapproved of the tired little bit of modernity who longed for a gay and suitable environment.

"Go, if you wish," the words shot out abruptly. "I've felt lately that you were not satisfied."

It wasn't until she had been away from home for three days that she began to regret her hasty departure. Her uncle had been unexpectedly detained in Chicago and Jean, resentful of her husband's lack of argument against her flight, had not notified Donald of her unexpected stay at the Congress. Donald had put her in a taxi to go to the station, where she would meet her Uncle Jim and had then hurried off to his office. "As though," she had told herself fiercely, "he were glad to be rid of me." She had scarcely glanced at the cluster of spiky carnations he had bought for her—had been ungracious when he handed her the latest Galsworthy book to read on her trip. "As though I wanted to read anything to improve my style," she had reflected. Jean sometimes wrote poetry which Donald smiled at. "Any way the title fits the case for 'Svan Song' is what I'd sing if I felt like singing anything. I'd have liked something tridier."

But Chicago without the quiet but companionable Donald seemed a desert to the spoiled girl and even the evenings of theaters and concerts had not consoled her. Her Uncle Jim had listened without comment to her lame excuses for not insisting that Donald spend his evenings with them, but she had the impression that he disapproved.

"The skyline is wonderful," she heard a woman at the next table say, "like great gray castles against turquoise, those buildings are."

Jean fell into one of her dreams promptly. Again she was in Edinburgh looking down first at the gay flowers in the square and then up at the rocky hill that led to her favorite castle.

"I'd like to live in a castle," she meditated, then her common sense caught back her vague flight on the unsubstantial back of Pegasus. A castle of that age would not be apt to be equipped with the modern luxuries that American women consider necessities. There would, likely, be mice and dubious drains. Jean smiled at this fancy. Ladies of a castle do not worry much, she felt, about the runnings of the remote kitchens. Still, homemaking had opened a new vista to Jean's mind and she felt that the kitchen was the heart of the home. A castle might be romantic, but—Jean's smile vanished. Her mind had leaped ahead again. She loved Scotland, although she had only a faint strain of Scottish blood in her. But she was thinking of that factor of a Scotchman's character. Loyalty was the word. Loyalty to ideals and to life. She saw herself, as she sat in the flower-scented room that thrilled with music, as a shirker; one who had accepted wifehood but who denied any responsibility in the joint work of marriage. She had done her work carelessly, touching her dishes with lazy, abhorrent fingers, dropping her tea-towels about instead of sending them and putting them out in the sunshine. She had sulked and drooped and complained instead of telling her husband frankly that she was fitting off to Europe to play while he remained at work. He had told her that one more year of the strenuous, almost incredible work he staggered under would put him on Easy street. Jean hadn't cared much, scarcely listened.

"I don't care," said Jean aloud, then bit her lip. No one had heard, though, for some one near her hummed the words to "Laugh, Clown Laugh." "I'm going to laugh," she told herself, "and I'm going back home tonight. Donald might not want me back," she worried, her mind suddenly alert to the danger of leaving a husband alone. And the spicy carnations suddenly assumed a new value in her mind. Sturdy and sweet and enduring they were. Donald was like that. Confronted and frightened, she planned, shaking her head when a man asked her to dance, glad when her uncle suggested going back to the hotel. "I guess this gay crowd bores you, Jean."

Breathlessly she told him of her change of mind and he agreed to take her out to La Grange that night. When their taxi stopped before the old house that Jean called a bungalow because it was on one floor she looked out eagerly through the snowy trees. There was a light.

"Run on in, Jean, I'll follow presently," was the tactful command. Donald sat tucked over the dining room table and Jean's heart sank. He was working and might be cross. "Donald, I'm sorry. I came back," she cried, hurrying herself across the littered room and landing in the arms he swiftly opened to receive her. "Castles and heather and moonlight can't make up for—home."

His tired eyes twinkled as he caught the familiar smell of violet that always heralded this fragrant if lazy little bride and he held her close a moment before speaking. "I'm sorry, too, Jeanie. After all a woman's home is her kingdom and we're going to buy in the spring. Meanwhile, I've been making out a list of some things you want for your kitchen. Maybe," he finished quaintly, "you can make believe it's a castle."

Pasted to the lengthy list was the scrap of turquoise fabric that would, in the generous estimate he had made, turn that shabby kitchen into beauty.

Wisdom of Epictetus
When you have brought yourself to supply the needs of the body at small cost, do not plume yourself on that, nor if you drink only water, keep saying on each occasion, "I drink water!" And if you ever want to practice endurance and toll, do so unto yourself and not unto others—do not embrace statues!—Epictetus.

Yellowed Old Missive Has Historic Interest

On February 25, 1853, hardly a decade after the first successful operation of a telegraph line, a telegram was sent from Natchez, Miss., to New Orleans. For more than 70 years, says International System News, the telegram lay forgotten in the home of the addressee. The paper became yellowed, the writing faded. Recently this telegram of ante-Civil war days was found, rescued from oblivion, and once again started on its travels. But this time no telegraph key rattled the message. Reincarnated as a postal photograph, it was sped from Atlanta to New York for reproduction in the International System News.

In 1853 the telegraph was still a novelty. If the crimsoned shade of Mrs. S. C. Irvin, who sent the message, or of the gaitered Walter Irvin, who received it, could see their telegram thus transmuted by the alchemy of modern science, to what bounds would their amazement not carry them?

The message, which reads, "All well. Get Fulton's bookkeeping double and single entry," was sent over the telegraph line which extended from Natchez to New Orleans, via Woodville, Miss., operated by a company which gloried in the name of the "New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Louisville; the United New Orleans and Ohio People's; St. Louis, Indiana and Lake Erie Telegraph Lines." The company and the line have alike vanished; the line was destroyed in 1865 by federal troops.

The blank was found at the Briars, one of the oldest residences at Natchez. The Briars is of historic interest as the house in which Jefferson Davis was married. M. W. Fassmann, husband of the great-granddaughter of the Mrs. Irvin, found the message, which he claims to be the oldest telegram extant in the South.

A drawing of what will be one of a fleet of the four largest airplanes in the world, to be completed by the end of 1936 at a cost of $2,000,000 by the General Development company of Connecticut, under the guidance of Dr. William Whitney Christmas, inventor of the altimeter system used on all airplanes. The huge ships are "flying wings" with a wing spread of 262 feet, overall height of 81½ feet, length of 138 feet and gross weight of 72½ tons. Each plane will have eight engines, each over 1,000 horse power in two units of four, and is designed to carry 100 passengers luxuriously—sleeping, eating and entertainment accommodations—and a crew of 17. The maximum capacity under Department of Commerce regulations will be 208 passengers.

Do you use milk bottles for jam, kerosene, paint, and other household articles? Perhaps you use them for flower vases, or in numerous other ways. If they get too dirty, probably they are thrown out with the ashes or trash. Such a procedure is far too common, says the Bureau of Dairy Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and adds materially to the consumer's milk bill. The annual milk-bottle bill of the Nation is close to $30,000,000 the bureau says, and at least $20,000,000 of this is loss occurring after the bottles leave the dairy. Last year in one large city, junk men picked off the city dumps 20,000,000 milk bottles which had been thrown away. These bottles had a value of over $1,000,000.

Where alfalfa grows well it will usually outyield any other legume. It will make cheaper hay than a legume, which must be seeded every year. Although experiments have shown that well-cured soybean hay is equal in value to alfalfa for milk production, it must be remembered that soybean hay is not only likely to be stemmy but is also more difficult to cure than alfalfa. In view of the success at the dairy experiment farm of the United States Department of Agriculture, in raising alfalfa on a heavy clay soil underlain with an almost impervious subsoil, it is believed that alfalfa can be made to thrive on many soils often considered unsuitable. Alfalfa makes such a good and cheap hay, according to the Bureau of Dairy Industry, that dairymen are urged to not give up the idea of raising alfalfa until convinced of its impracticability either by trial or by consulting some reliable authority.

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK A. M. S. C. D.

Director of Public Health Education, State of Pennsylvania.

Indoor Sun

THE present day eloquence of the high-powered advertisement writer has found an extremely popular outlet in connection with the sun. One has but to read in the front and back pages of the magazines fully to appreciate the miraculous power of the sun's rays as a healing and health developing agent.

And the strange thing about it is that no matter how eloquent these expressive men may become on the subject, they cannot get very far away from the truth. As an agency for health and well-being old Sol stands almost alone in efficiency and wonder working.

But there is a great chance of one becoming slightly confused on this subject. The use of the sun's rays as a healing agent under professional guidance is one matter, and the purchase of so-called sun lamps to be used as a substitute for the natural sun is quite another one.

To begin with, a sun lamp to do its job properly must give forth ultra-violet rays in sufficient quantities; and in the second place, the application of such rays requires intelligent direction.

As a matter of fact, a number of the so-called sun lamps are somewhat lacking in their ability to generate the ultra-violet ray. They will give forth heat, most certainly—but that is about all. However, sun-mindedness need not suffer because of such a mechanical deficiency.

It must not be forgotten that the natural sun yet shines for every one. And those who really desire the benefit of the ultra-violet rays can in most seasons and upon many days obtain them through the simple expedient of getting outdoors.

It is safe to say that a brisk walk daily in the sunshine, moonshine or no shine at all will do the normal person quite as much good as the use of the average so-called sun lamp.

On the other hand, if one is sick and is actually in need of the indoor sun, then follow the doctor's advice regarding it. But don't fly off the handle on this artificial sun question.

Shoo Bad Shoes

SOME months ago the statement was made that many pupils in the schools throughout the country were suffering from foot ailments. The fact was based upon an examination of thousands of children in several of the largest cities in the United States. Ill fitting shoes that cramped the toes and squeezed the feet were, in most instances, blamed for this very unfortunate situation.

The young children can scarcely be held accountable for wearing ill-proper footwear. They do not know any better. On the other hand, shoe merchants could undoubtedly prevent much of it, and parents could eliminate practically all of it.

To foist ill fitting shoes upon the young people is nothing short of criminal. Feet permanently injured with bunions and misshapen toes can, and do, cause a great deal of suffering in later life. This in itself is bad enough. But when backache, headache, neuritis and even that old happiness wrecker—rheumatism, can often be traced to improper foot gear, the question becomes an exceedingly important one.

Fortunately, the older people in the main are sensible about this matter so far as they themselves are concerned, but many of them seem to lack interest in the juvenile shoe problem.

Present-day competition is sufficiently exhausting without placing the burden of painful feet, or pain from feet, upon the young people. Shoo bad shoes away from them and keep them "shoed" properly.

P. S. Short stockings also, can usually worn, are almost as bad as short shoes. And ultra high heels are as bad as stockings. (© 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

Household Pets Called

On Business Uses A Manchester (England) paper recently carried the following advertisement:—"Cat wanted in city warehouse, 6 p. m. to 9 a. m. each day. Owner to deliver and collect. Five shillings per week and carfare."

The advertisement was inserted by a firm engaged in the blouse and costume business. Poison having failed to kill off rats overrunning the warehouse, the hereditary enemy of the rodents is being called upon. To cats it will appear as the thin edge of the wedge, the first move in a campaign to enlist the essential esthetics in the ranks of commerce. Dogs are not eschewing. These animals are hired out in the west end of London to match women's dresses. Large black and white dogs are in great demand to go with magpie two-piece costumes, and brindle-colored dogs are very popular, as they go well with country clothes. In line with this utilization of pets, and bearing in mind the insect epidemic that summer usually brings in its train, residents of New York might find it profitable to adopt ant eaters to be hired out by the hour, day or week.—New York Times.

BASKETBALL STARS FROM SOPHOMORES

Some Sport in Bringing the Youngsters Into Limelight.

All Big Ten basketball fans are familiar with the capabilities of "Stretch" Murphy, Ted Chmielewski and all of the other famous veterans of the league, but the stars of tomorrow will come out of the present sophomores, and there may be some sport in bringing these youngsters into range of the spotlight now.

Purdue has a good prospect in Johnny Wooden of Martinsville, the "Indiana rubber man" of Indiana prep basketball from 1925 to 1928, who is a master dribbler and is expected to develop into a floor guard of the type of Don White and "Windy" Robbins. He has a great eye and specializes in sudden charges under the basket, ending with an elastic bounce that puts him in scoring position.

Billy Blygrave, the tallest man on the Indiana university squad, standing 6 feet 8 inches tall, looks like the regular back guard on the Hoosier team.

Bill Newbold, who received all-state mention while playing at Ravenna, Ind., is Notre Dame's best sophomore. He is tall, fast and good on defense. He scored ten points in the opener with Kalamazoo and is slated to fill the position left by Frank Crowe, all-star forward for the last two years.

Reg Hildreth of Valparaiso, Ind., is playing regularly at forward for Iowa. He is also a basketball star, likely to make shortstop on the Hawk nine next spring, succeeding Willis Glasgow.

A little old cowbell is becoming as famous a victory token in the South as the Minnesota-Michigan little brown jug. Since 1924 the bovine neck ornament has been the prized emblem of the victor in the Georgia Tech-Vanderbilt gridiron combat. Possession of the token has changed with regularity, neither team having been victorious two years in a row since Ed F. Cavalieri of Atlanta put up the clanging trophy.

Rugby, according to a university president, failed in America because it taught a lesson we already knew too well—to pass the buck; get rid of the ball. Football, says he, demands holding onto the ball and doing the best you can with it. Whether that statement is unquestionably true or not, the fact remains that all sorts of sport tend to raise the ethical standards generally among the people who are interested in them.

One of the fallacies that creep continually into all-American reports is the premise that the team is being put up just like a real college varsity for actual competition. The catch is—what style of play is to be used, a shift, open, forward passing game; a power attack or a kick and wait for the break? Obviously the players selected for one style will not do for another.

Nagurski of the Gophers, who played football nearly all of the time this year for his team, is used frequently at tackle on the all-stars, although the New York Evening Post's poll for its all-American brought him 148 points as a back to 48 as a tackle. As a matter of fact, of course, everybody knows that the Bronk would have been a better end than anything else, if the needs of his team had not required him to perform at other positions.

Harvard's varsity hockey team will play 14 games, with the possibility that two more may be added to the schedule released recently. The first game was with Boston university. A two-game series will be played with Toronto, Boston university and Dartmouth, and the best two out of three with Yale.

When Manuel Cueto, the little Cuban, was playing with Cincinnati he once gave a demonstration of how the English is used by some of the men of the side. At that time Cueto was one of those fellows who understood English pretty well when he wanted to, but was afflicted with "no abe" spells when they were convenient.

In one of Cincinnati's games a fly ball was hit between Cueto and another of the outfielders. Both called for it and both stopped in their tracks, letting the ball drop for an extra base hit.

When the players went to the bench Cueto was berated for his part in the affair, but was ready with his alibi. "When I say 'I gottem' that means 'you taken,'" he said to his teammates.

Duke university, baby member of the Southern Conference, will make its first serious bid for Dixie laurels in the 1930 football season, having hooked five games with conference foes.

This season Duke's only conference opponents were Louisiana State, North Carolina and North Carolina State. The Blue Devils will meet South Carolina, Kentucky, Washington and Lee, North Carolina and North Carolina State next fall.

Tennessee hasn't been beaten on its home field in four years.

"It's the bunk." That's what Harry Kipke, coach of Michigan's varsity football team, thinks of Glen Warner's plan for scoring gridiron games. Kipke found only two faults with the rules as observed the past season; he thinks a fumbled lateral pass should be dead at the point of fumbling and that a kicking team should be allowed to run with the ball after having one of its punts blocked.

"Warner's scheme of counting one point for each first down and abolishing the point after touchdown would work unfairly and would put a premium on the team that can make first down in its own territory, but can't gain an inch after passing mid-field," Coach Kipke said.

"The kick after touchdown requires perfect co-ordination of the whole team, and there's no reason why it should be erased from the rule book."

Baseball Games Played at Night at Des Moines

Baseball at night is the new feature of the game for 1930. It is to be played in Des Moines next season for the first time. This was announced by Lee Kaiser, president of the Des Moines club.

"We have had engineers of the biggest electric companies on the job and plans are completed to play our games next season after dark," said Kaiser. "They have guaranteed to produce 'daylight' for us by their newest methods of lighting, which are a great improvement over the flood lighting system used in the last year or two for night football games."

"In Des Moines we have lost money the last two years. But if we can play ball at night, when the people can go, we feel sure it will be a success. These electrical engineers declare they can make it as light as day. We're going through with it."

"It is our plan to play all the week-day games at night and to play Sunday afternoon games by daylight. If it is golf and business that is keeping men away from our ball games, they will have no excuse next summer because the games will be after business hours and they can't play golf at night. I look for our adventure to revolutionize the game."

Wilkes-Barre Cop Makes Real Catch in Gotham

It has often been said things come to those who wait, and Dick Horn, hefty copper on the Wilkes-Barre police force, is the monumental example of that old axiom.

Richard, the policeman, had a day off recently. He went to New York to watch his favorite New York Giants play the Cincinnati Reds in a double program. It was an ideal day for baseball, and Richard, the copper, accepted the warm sun for the chance to sit out in the bleachers. The copper hung his coat over a rail.

During the afternoon, Outfielder Allen poked out a home run into the stands. A thousand hands went high into the air—the fans wanted the baseball. The policeman sat quietly by—he wasn't excited over the spheroid coming into the stands. High into the air it was hit, and then it began the descent as Allen raced around the bases. It was an exciting moment. Hands reached out, but the ball fell on the edge of the rail, and lo, and behold, it fell into the pocket of Dick Horn's coat.

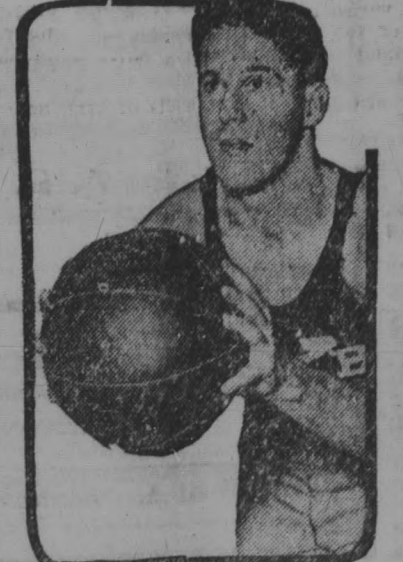

The Wilkes-Barre patrolman returned home, the proud possessor of a baseball he secured in a most unusual way.

Lou Gehrig Started His Ball Career as Pitcher

Lou Gehrig, Yankee first baseman, started his baseball career like so many other star ball players—as a pitcher.

When the New York scouts began paying attention to Gehrig, he was pitching for Columbia university. The record books show that Gehrig pitched one of the most unusual games ever played. In a Columbia vs. Williams contest on April 18, 1923, Gehrig struck out 17 Williams batters and lost the game by a 5 to 1 score.

Whiskers Not Likely to Return to Fashion

Some men (a few) look well in whiskers, but fashion doesn't care a whit for that. It says, Nay. The uncovered face makes a clean sweep. A few mustaches survive, small reminders of the period following the Civil war, when they gradually superseded the beards the generals and many soldiers in the ranks brought back from the camp and the battlefield.

President Harrison was the last of the Presidents to wear a beard. There was a general ruck of hair in the latter 1800s; even college students in photographs can be seen wearing more or less transparent burnisides. The depilation began soon after that. The hair on the caput became shorter, also; and the manfolk generally began to be "down on hair." It was a wrench for the elder masculine population to give up their chin whiskers, but they yielded and compromised on keeping the upper lip unshaven. Now, few men living know what their whiskers would look like if they "turned them out," curious as many of them are about it.

Other Senses of Blind

Not Overly Developed

Blind persons do not hear better, they simply seem to because they listen harder. Mrs. Winifred Hathaway, of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, told members of the Michigan Educational Institute. The popular belief that blind people have more acuity of other senses, such as hearing and touch, is not exactly correct. The special senses of blind people, aside from sight, are no better in the beginning than those of other people, sometimes not so good. But experience and specialization on the part of the blind persons enable them to make their other senses take the place of sight, so that their senses are better developed than those of normal people. The same thing applies to deaf persons who appear to have much keener vision than normal.

Champion Egg Tester

The "egg wizard" is the name given Miss May Norton of the United Fairies, London. She can toss them about as a juggler does billiard balls, but her specialty is passing them in front of a light at the rate of 1,440 an hour. Miss Norton's official title is egg tester. It is her job to see whether an egg is new laid, fresh, or on the stale side. She does it by a present-day candling method, which consists of putting a black metal box with a hole at one end around an electric globe and letting the rays strike through the eggs when held up to the aperture. In response to a challenge by a farmer, Miss Norton once tested 300 eggs in twelve minutes. Since she started she has not had a single break.

Virtues of "Sneeze" Gas

The danger of asphyxiation by illuminating gas would be virtually eliminated through the use of a "sneeze" gas which she has invented. Miss Mary L. Sherrill of Mt. Holyoke college faculty believes. The new gas, when mixed with illuminating gas, produces a sneeze which would arouse a sleeper and bring from him an involuntary cry of alarm, according to the inventor.

Menlo Items

By D. E. O'KEEFE

About three hundred yards from the Alameda as it turns into Santa Cruz avenue and only a short distance from Holy Cross cemetery, there stands a mammoth oak with wide spreading branches and boughs that reach to the earth below. The great height and majesty of the tree challenges the admiration of all travelers. For centuries it has baffled the winds that at times sweep down from the Santa Morena mountains. It is still rugged. If the onward march of progress does not remove it for the erection of some stately mansion it bids fair to survive for many more centuries. Surrounding the ancient oak is a tragic story now forgotten by the present generation. In boyhood it was related to me by my parents and was also told to me by old timers of Menlo Park. It is an interesting tale.

In the mid seventies there was a man named J. Casey who had charge of the collection of poll taxes for it was the time of the Chinese agitation to drive the Orientals from the state. Dennis Kearney started the cry. Fearing that they would be stopped from coming to the state the Celestials arrived from the old country in large numbers. The city reaped a big harvest in the collection of poll tax. By a fraudulent receipt large sums of money was diverted from the city treasury to the pockets of the corrupt officials and political bosses of that period. Casey was an Irishman. He was born in a small village in the fertile plain of the graceful River Liffey in Kildare. He was indicted by the grand jury of San Francisco. The Irishmen of the city and the peninsula espoused his cause. They knew he was a scape goat and a tool for the higher-ups. They knew the cards were stacked against him and it would be futile to defend him in court. The only recourse was to get him out of the country and to South America, where there were no extradition laws in force at that time.

The night before his arrest Con Mooney, a noted sportsman and cock fighter of San Francisco, whose name two decades ago was a byword in sporting circles, bundled Casey into his buggy and drove him down the peninsula to the home of John Murray, located close to St. Dennis Church in the mountain fastness. Casey would rest in the deep jungle in the day time and come to the Murray residence at night for food. The San Francisco detective force was hot on the trail of the fugitive. John Edgar was then sheriff of San Mateo county, and with his deputy, Jack Stafford, joined in the hunt. Every Irishman in this vicinity aided in throwing the officers off the right track, although the sleuths knew that Casey was in hiding at the Murray ranch. The chase became so hot that those shielding the fugitive selected the big oak as a haven for Casey. A bed was improvised in the deep foliage of the mammoth tree by his adherents at Menlo Park. In the darkness of night Casey accompanied by John Murray, Dennis Martin and John Monahan trekked down the mountain over the valley to the oak, where a few men from Menlo Park awaited them. There in his lofty and leafy quarters, Casey remained for two weeks. During the day time John Murray would drive down from his home with hammer and nails and a bucket of food in hand. His pretense at repairing the fences was to throw off any suspicion that officers who shadowed him might have. At a certain signal he would drop the bucket and at night Casey would come down from the tree for the much cherished meal. Each day a different portion of the fence would be repaired by Murray.

At the first apparent relaxation of vigilance on the part of the officers Casey's friends acted promptly. Mooney came down from San Francisco very late one night with a spanking fast team of horses. Casey was spirited away to Alviso, where a small boat awaited him that was to convey him to a large vessel that lay in the stream about to sail for Valparaiso. At the morning's progress dawn, Casey climbed the side of the ship to be met by Captain Michael O'Higgins who saw to it that his countryman was safely hidden. The vessel pulled anchor and soon sails were set and before noon the noble ship went majestically through the Golden Gate on its long voyage to the southern port. It was the last of Casey. He was seen no more.

About a year afterwards a San Francisco grand jury exonerated Casey holding that he was only a tool in the hands of the politicians and that he did not profit one dollar by the fraudulent scheme to bleed the heathen. The pardon came "too late" for judgment had already been passed on Casey in that tribunal above from which there is no appeal, he having died from a virulent fever a short time before his exoneration by the grand, in a southern capital.

For years the oak was known as the Casey tree. Pioneers of that period, particularly those friendly to Casey, in passing the lonely oak would stop and point to it, recounting the tragic story of Casey and his sad ending far from home and friends.

Some years ago Stanford scientists agreed that the tree was then 750 years old so that it must have been a good size sappling when King John of England in 1215 on the plains of Runnymede signed or granted the Magna Charta which has been viewed by after ages as the basis of English liberties.

All the actors in the Casey incident have long since passed over the border but the ancient oak still stands as a mute witness of that unhappy and sorrowful event of the dim long ago.

The Owners of the Property Are the Ones To Say the Word
There is much discussion heard on all sides concerning the proposed street improvements in Stanford Park, which matter is now before the city council for action. All would like to see the proposed work proceed as great benefit to the city would issue. Perhaps the work could be done at less cost now than at any future time owing to slackness of business by the contractors. When all is said and done, however, the owners of property on the streets sought to be improved are the ones
